

CHAPTER XL.

HE grind of the wheels under the brakes had hardly cased when a high official of the court of Grahoffen sprang aboard train, journey time way and expectantly, pouring throug : the windows and doors of conch after conch. But he did not find the man he sought. Hurrying through the last car of the train, at incl he half-ciumbled over the limp form of Har-iel lying on the floor where Roleau's arm had flung him, neck and crop. "Quak here he camed out "Here a murder—but by whom? Where have they got to? After them, med." But new some sort of answer to their questioning came in a shoul from the station planform. Home one was pointing beyond the train up the mountain side. The official sprang mountain side. The ufficial sprang forward.

"After them, men! They must have done time," cried he. "They have what we seen."

A band of mounted men an instant late rode out of the station in full pursuit of the fugitives. They raced down the road toward a bridge which spanned the stream ahead.

"Look yonder, Excellency!" ex-

"Look yonder, Excellencyl" ex-claimed Holeau at length, as he turned and faced down the slope to gaze at these pursuers. They cut us off on ahead. Look-they are

He jooked this way and that, as the three paused uncertain. At last his eyes fell upon a vast boulder that lay mearby the edge of the ridge upon hich they stood. He cast a swift ance below. Bracing himself, he trew his shoulders against the judger, exercising every ounce of his vn prodigious strength. The advancing soldiery heard the roar of the coming stone, saw how imminent was the danger from it, but some of the ricers were already at the bridge itself as it struck. It the dridge lise; as it struck. It crashed through the timbers as it they had been straw. What had been the bridge was a rule. Horses, riders—all were carried down into the stream below.

"Come, now," cried Kitty's companion to her companion to panion to her once more as they saw the pursuit arrested. "On ahead there may be a better place—we may yet get through if we hasten."

At length, well-nigh spent, they flung themselves down in this place of greater security. Far telow they could see mounted men still coming.

Count Frederick and Roleau made with the country of the c such silent answer as they could. Each drew his weapon and prepared it for what might next ensue. "We can hold them for a little time," said Count Frederick, judi-

Kitty had made her own resolve Roleau extended his hand to he. She took the coin into her possession. unseen by Frederick. A moment later she was speeding away, crouch-ing, attempting to cut in ahead of the mounted men below.

CHAPTER XLI.

Kitty paused for a little rest and a little food. What should she do? For a time the was undecided, but presently her resolution was made.

resolution was made.

"I will try it," said she to herself.
"I will go to the palace direct. I will see if I can get access to the king!"
Rank by rank of the guard she passed by this way or that, wheedling
them, threatening them, bribing them, until she found herself within the dors of the palace.

"Mademoiselle, sgain!" exclaimed King Michael. "Welcome then." His mottled face did indeed express gratification at seeing her once more.

Kitty first made apology for her disordered apparel. "I ask Your Majesty's pardon," said she, "for my plight. I am sure of my welcome only because of the news I bring—I am
from the front—the war!"

"The front—the war!"

"The front—the War—mademoiselle, what do you mean? What war?
We are not at war!" But even as he spoke the blood shrank hack from his face.
